Matthew 18:1-4, ESV.

18 At that time the disciples came to Jesus, saying, "Who is the greatest in the kingdom of heaven?"² And calling to him a child, he put him in the midst of them³ and said, "Truly, I say to you, unless you turn and become like children, you will never enter the kingdom of heaven.

⁴Whoever humbles himself like this child is the greatest in the kingdom of heaven.

The New and Improved Testament.

When I was in college, I had a friend whose mother was schizophrenic. She drove a station wagon, which she had hand-painted, by brush, in a myriad of colors. There were no commercially available battery powered personal computers back then. And so, on the back seat was a typewriter, and on the back seat, on the floor of the back seat, and on the passenger's seat, were the many hundreds of pages of scripture that she had written. She believed that God had commissioned her to write a new Bible, a sort of a next Testament, or, as we used to cruelly joke, the New and Improved Testament. Most everyone in the dorm knew about my friend's mother because she would call the dorm whenever she needed help. This was in southern California and my friend was going to college an hour or so from where he had grown up. He used to tell me that he dearly wished that he had gone to college out of state. To put it mildly, my friend was very embarrassed about his mother. She had a habit of driving around, stopping to type a few pages, driving some more, then stopping to spread the faith, driving some more, then typing more, spreading the faith some more, and then driving, until she ran out of gas. Then she would call her son at the dorm for him to come rescue her. His mother lived in a tortured mental state - and her behavior tortured her son. It showed in his bearing: he was in a constant state of high, nervous anxiety. To this day, every time I think of him, I feel deeply sorry for what he went through.

This was well before cell phones and the dorm phone line was answered by a student at a front desk in the dorm. That student would buzz the room of the person who received a phone call so they could go to an extension in the hallway and answer it. The student at the desk knew enough to pass on calls from my friend's mother to other students. So, I happened to be the one who got the call one day when she called, as my friend was not in the dorm. My friend's mother was at a pay phone, needing someone to come and bring her gas. I, too, was from southern California, and when she told me where she was, I realized that she was in a poor Hispanic neighborhood that had a lot of gang activity. Worse, when I asked her if there were any other people around, she calmly said yes, that there were some young men there, and that as a matter of fact, they were armed. Interestingly, she seemed oblivious to the immediate danger I thought she was in. Her real concern was simply that she was lost and stranded. She had to get on with God's mission, she told me. How could God allow her car to run out of gas yet again? She was only going to live so long, she said. She had so much more to write and so many more mission journeys to take. You've got to help me, she begged, when I told her that her son wasn't around. I'm going to get back to this story of my friend's mother.

We're going to talk in detail about the story of Adam and Eve. So please listen to this carefully. It's from Genesis 2:15-17 and 20-24, taken from the English Standard Version, and I have edited this a bit for brevity.

¹⁵ The Lord God took the man and put him in the garden of Eden to work it and keep it. ¹⁶ And the Lord God commanded the man, saying, "You may surely eat of every tree of the garden, ¹⁷ but of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil you shall not eat, for in the day that you eat of it you shall surely die." ²⁰ The man called his wife's name Eve, because she was the mother of all living. ²¹ And the LORD God made for Adam and for his wife garments of skins and clothed them. ²² Then the LORD God said, "Behold, the man has become like one of us in knowing good and evil. Now, lest he reach out his hand and take also of the tree of life and eat, and live forever—" ²³ therefore the LORD God sent him out from the garden of Eden to work the ground from which he was taken. ²⁴ He drove out the man, and at the east of the garden of Eden he placed the cherubim and a flaming sword that turned every way to guard the way to the tree of life.

Let's talk about the Garden of Eden and the casting out from Eden of Adam and Eve. Here's some Genesis background. Among the trees in the Garden of Eden were two special trees, the Tree of Life and the Tree of the Knowledge of Good and Evil. Note that this second tree is not the Tree of Good and Evil, but rather the Tree of the Knowledge of Good and Evil. God put trees in the Garden in part to supply food for Adam and Eve, but he made one very serious restriction. In Genesis 2:16 to 17, God gives Adam a warning:

.¹⁶ And the LORD God commanded the man, saying, "You may surely eat of every tree of the garden, ¹⁷ but of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil you shall not eat, for in the day that you eat of it you shall surely die."

We all know that Adam and Eve broke this rule and got tossed out of Eden as a result.

Now, immediately after eating the fruit from the Tree of the Knowledge of Good and Evil, they had a revelation. Here is Genesis 3:7:

Then the eyes of both were opened, and they knew that they were naked. And they sewed fig leaves together and made themselves loincloths.

They hadn't done any clothes shopping during their tenure so far in the Garden of Eden; they were naked long before they ate this fruit. But eating the forbidden fruit made them somehow vulnerable to shame. What's going on here? This story is a very deliberate allegory on the part of the biblical author. Eating from the Tree of the Knowledge of Good and Evil represents Adam and Eve striking out on their own and trying to live in the world without any guidance from God, without letting God take the time to teach them how to live. God was supposed to decide when they were ready to understand and process the knowledge of good and evil. So, their nakedness is of course symbolic. They instantly knew all about evil and how it differs from good. They were overwhelmed. Evil was bad stuff, and they didn't know what to make of it. They had been poisoned spiritually by gaining knowledge that they weren't yet ready to comprehend. God was to be the judge of when they were ready for that fruit – but they had jumped the gun, proceeding without the guidance of God.

The story gets heightened, and the symbolism grows. God then tells Adam and Eve that they should never eat the fruit of that other special tree, the Tree of Life – because it would make them live forever. Now, what's wrong with living forever? Well, you don't want to live forever in a state of sin and corruption – and that's what would have happened if they had eaten the fruit from the Tree of Life after disobeying God and eating fruit from the Tree of the Knowledge of Good and Evil before they were ready. But now, life outside the Garden was going to be tough. They would have to fend for themselves. Here is what God said would happen, now that Adam and Eve were no longer innocent, now that they knew about evil:

cursed is the ground because of you; in pain you shall eat of it all the days of your life.... By the sweat of your face you shall eat bread, till you return to the ground, for out of it you were taken; for you are dust, and to dust you shall return.

They would have to work desperately hard for a living. If they had obeyed God and not eaten the fruit of the Tree of the Knowledge of Good and Evil, they would have eventually learned about these things, but only when they were ready, when God had prepared and guided them. Then they would have eventually been allowed to eat the fruit of the Tree of Life and they would have lived forever in comfort and happiness.

After Adam and Eve get booted out of the garden, God goes on to guard the Tree of Life by placing a cherubim with a flaming sword near the tree to make sure Adam and Eve don't sneak back for a taste of its fruit. God, you see, even though they disobeyed, is now protecting Adam and Eve from themselves. He doesn't want them to live forever in a corrupt state, having knowledge they were not prepared for, so they had to be kept from the Tree of Life. They had to die, as all people on Earth do, so this would not happen. If they had just listened God – and that was their true sin, not trusting God to know what is best – they would have lived forever in bliss in the Garden of Eden.

We are meant to become morally autonomous, to be able to control our actions, to do what's right and not do what's wrong. But we are supposed to have a moral autonomy that is under the guidance of God. Adam and Eve thought they didn't need God. They thought they could become like God, to know about good and evil, and to do it without God having any authority over them. The story of Adam and Eve is an allegory about a misplaced attempt at taking on the terrible complexities and challenges of life without the help of God.

We see in life that some people focus on the difference between a literal versus a non-literal view of the Bible, and we often focus on this distinction. I think this concern is misguided. Many people have drifted away from their childhood faith, many have raised their kids outside of the faith, many reject Christianity outright – because they simply cannot believe the wild tales found in the Bible. I have had agnostic and atheist friends of mine ask me many times if I truly believe all that mystical crap in the Bible. I tell them that I do believe the Bible. I believe – because parts of the Bible can be literally true and figuratively true at the same time. Even the same part of the Bible can be both factual in a literal sense, as well as being an allegory. Let me continue.

Consider the name Adam. This word, when translated from the original Hebrew word "Adham" found in Genesis in the Hebrew Scriptures means "human" or "person". The Hebrew name Eve, "Hawwāh", as it is found in the Hebrew Scriptures is related to the word “living” or “the source of life”. Adam represents humanity and Eve represents the source of all human life. The story of Adam and Eve is in many ways symbolic, and I believe that the original writers of it did not mean for us to take it literally. This story tells us an important lesson: if we want direction in life, if we want to differentiate good from evil, and then deal with this difference properly, we need to do the right thing: listen to God.

But there is another view of the story of Adam and Eve – that in a certain sense is literally a true story. In a way, there apparently was a real Adam and a real Eve. Now, we don’t have any scientific evidence that Adam ever existed. But there is evidence that there was indeed a sort of Eve. There is evidence that a “mitochondrial Eve” – the single, maternal ancestor of all living humans, genetics researchers tell us, did exist. Scientists have used a technique that leverages profiles taken from random blood donors. Based on the similarity between the genetic material of people, scientists assign a number that defines the degree to which any two donors are related to each other. Using mitochondrial genetic material, which we always inherit from our mothers, simplifies the task of finding common ancestors because, while humans have more than 20,000 genes, the mitochondria contain only 37 genes. More importantly, this material rarely changes as it is passed down from mother to daughter, and it changes at a predictable rate. So, by knowing how related people are, that is by measuring how much the mitochondrial pool has changed over time, we can infer the approximate time of the so-called mitochondrial Eve – and that turns out to be 200,000 years ago, approximately. Yes, we seem to all have a common female ancestor. But this only means that all other DNA lines before the mitochondrial Eve was born have died out, not that there were no other DNA lines before Eve. If this Eve hadn't had any children, none of us would exist. She is, in a scientific sense, Eve, the single, female ancestor of all of us. But no, I don't think the author of Genesis knew this.

So, what about my friend's mother? When I was on the phone with my friend's schizophrenic mother, and she told me that she had some armed young men around her, I asked her if I could please talk to them. One of them got on the phone with me. Now, I had grown up in a largely Hispanic neighborhood. But I had been an A student who never got involved in anything illegal. I was deathly afraid of gang members. You know what that young man said to me? That young man with a gun who was talking to my friend's schizophrenic mother? He said: Don't worry about this lady. We'll give her some gas and tell her how to get back on the freeway. Even though she's kind of worked up, we like her. She says that God talks to her all the time, and she types it up. What God has told her is on paper in her car, man, all over the car. We read some of it and we think it's mostly a bunch of stuff from the Bible kind of rehashed. He said to me that this lady has Adam and Eve in there, and they had just read that part. It's a little different, but it's mostly the same as in the Bible. Want to know why we like her? It's because she says that all of us here in East L.A. are made in the image of God. She says that we should believe in God because we are all children of the same Adam and Eve. Of course, she was right. We even think we know when Eve lived, maybe 200,000 years ago.

There is another reason, a much more important reason, that I wanted to talk about my friend's mother, more than just this allegory of Adam and Eve. She was schizophrenic, and in her deluded way, she was doing her best to serve God. She was a very good person. She never ate the fruit from the Tree of the Knowledge of Good and Evil. She had no ability to hold evil within her. She never learned about good and evil at all, not on her own, and not from God, either. Because of her illness, she was totally innocent. She was like Eve before the fall. Our job on this Earth is to strive to be as innocent as her, while perhaps not being schizophrenic. Jesus tells us this in the Gospel of Matthew:

“Truly, I say to you, unless you turn and become like children, you will never enter the kingdom of heaven. ⁴ Whoever humbles himself like this child is the greatest in the kingdom of heaven.

The only way we can do it - because unlike my friend's mother, we cannot avoid learning about good and evil – is to do it with God's guidance. We are descended from a true, actual mitochondrial Eve - that is the literal part of the story. The allegorical part of the story is that God doesn't want us to go out and live in the world on our own. We must let God take our hand and teach us and guide us.
